

Sherry my creative director told me she really liked the composition of the home page however, she wasn't sure about the white background and the font choice I used. She also felt that I still was lacking the unified color scheme she was hoping to have on the page. So my next step is to experiment with type and color choices for the overall page.

Sherry also wasn't crazy about the individual information screens and felt they lacked some variety. We talked about maybe moving away from the circle compositions for those pages and possibly using a large image as a backdrop for those.

Besides that it was just noted that the 'Woody Allen' title image I used for the home page was a little grainy at that scale so I am going to replicate the image as a SVG to prevent this.

Also we discussed added in drop down menu bar that persisted throughout all the information screens
